

ALIGNING DEVELOPMENT CO-OPERATION AND CLIMATE ACTION: THE ONLY WAY FORWARD

As developing countries prepare their next round of national commitments under the Paris Agreement in 2020, providers of development co-operation must ensure they are supporting their transition to low-emissions, climate-resilient pathways.

How climate-compatible is international aid? To what extent are official financial flows to developing countries and the actions they support “consistent with a pathway towards low greenhouse gas emissions and climate-resilient development”, per Article 2.1 of the Paris Agreement?

Panelists will review the evidence recently published by the OECD, and discuss the guidance it proposes for aligning development co-operation with ambitious climate action.
