

Facing the Effects of Climate Change and Increasing Resilience in Central America

CABEI – Central American Bank for Economic Integration

5 November, 15:30 – 17:00

The climbing global temperatures are shifting the weather patterns and actions need to be taken. The importance of building strategic alliances to jointly develop new financing schemes and promote projects that help address climate change in the Central American region is CABEI's priority.

This side event will share insights how the social and economic devastation caused by the pandemic and the climate change events have wrought the financing schemes in CABEI :from innovative financing to co-financing. The Dry Corridor regional initiative proposed to the Green Climate Fund will be presented, as an example of an adaptation project to increase climate resilience in the Central American region.
